vernment will make a profit of 66 2-3 per cent on every dellar padd them of full weight, with the trifing seduction of the expense of recoining it. The injustice of this arrangement was shown, and the propriety of paying to the selier himself the coin we gave at this depreciated rate urged, but in vain.

For gold the rate is more, as the disparity between the value of bullion and that of coin among the Japanese is not so great. A tack weight of gold is valued at nineteen tacks currency, and a mace at one tack links mace. The gold dollar weighs almost five candarcens, but the Japanese have reckoned it as the twentleth part of a $20 piece, which they give as eight mace, eight candarcens, and consequently the dollar is only four candarcens, four cash. This weight brings the gold dollar, when compared with the tack of bullion gold, worth nineteen tacks, to be worth $26 cash, and the $20 piece to be worth 16,720 cash, or skiteen tacks, seven mace, two candarcens. This, when converted into a silver value, makes a gold dollar worth $24 cents, and a $20 piece $10 45, at which the Japanese prepose to take them. But this valuation of the gold dollar, when reckoned at $36 cash, the assessed value by the Japanese government, suffers the same depreciation as our silver, and its real value, when compared with the inflated currency in use among the people, is only about 17½ cents. Consequently, by this estimate gold becomes 50 per cent worse for us to pay than silver. The currency value of a gold dollar, taking the itsebu as of equal purity, and comparing them weight (so only its only 1,046 cash, or nearly $20 cents in silver, so that the actual depreciation on the part of the Japanese is not so great as silver, being for the two metals, when weight is only 1,046 cash, or nearly $20 cents in silver, so that the schuld epreciation on the part of the Japanese is not so great as silver, being for the two metals, when weight is only 1,046 cash, or nearly $20 cents in silver, so that the schuld epreciation on the part of the Japan

We carefully investigated the price of the cost to be detwered to vessels at this port. We tearn that 10,000 catties, or 100 plouls, have arrived, and this, at the rate of 1,680 cattles to a ton of 2,240 pounds or 15 4.5 plculs, cost 263 taels 6 mace 5 candarems 3 cash, or $164 16, making the rate to be $27 91 per ton. The Japanese state the price of coal would be considerably reduced as the demand for it increased and their facilities for mining besame more perfect.

This report is in so far imperfect as it emits to mention that the Japanese declared their valuation to be just, as putting foreigners on perfect equality with their own people. They objected in defence:

1. That they could not allow a recoinage of the dollar into three itsebus; their currency was regulated once in twenty-five or fifty years, by the Emperor ordering more coin from the mint to meet the requirements of trade.

2. That the Emperor, by putting his stamp on coin.

2. That the Emperor, by putting his stamp on coin, could make it pass in his own empire for what he chose, and that he could put that stamp on paper as well.

3. That there was no injustice, since Japanese, for one stebu could purchase about three times its weight in silver at the several treasury offices, if they wanted it have ornaments or manufacturing purposes.

silver at the several treasury offices, if they wanted it for ornaments or manufacturing purposes.

4. That they knew the dollar to be worth about 1,500 cash in China, and as their cash was of superior alloy, they could not imagine how their valuation of 1,000 cash could be objected to; that their valuation of 1,000 cash could be objected to; that their valuation was not only just but liberal. Exception was taken, however, on the ground that the requirements of trade and occasional scarcity of silver, enused a fluctuation in the price of the silver dollar in China; but the Japanese replied that they wanted no fluctuation, but an arrangement; that should prove lasting and med refunding the difference networn as the on the 250 given at Yokohama, neither seas their claim against Dr. S. Wells William was mentioned), for the difference between 500 cash on the estimated $4,000 paid in Ha k was mentioned 4,800 cash on the Japanese, establishing the value of a deliar at 4,670 cash.

A convention, probably the one referred to, was signed on the 17th June, 1887, by which the deliar (see article 3) will be taken according to weight, against Japanese coin, allowing 6 per cent reduction for recoinage. In subsetheir views of compromise, they have now invented a new coin, exclusively to be used in the intersourse with foreigners. It cannot be denied that the embarramments to result from the only possible solution to the government of Japan, will be of a very serious nature, doubling in value as it would, all the gold they now possess. Should a further consequence be free export of bullion, its importance can scarcely be over estimated, for such is the auriferous wealth of Japan, if accounts held thus far for reliable, are to be believed, that the Emperor (gold being crown property) in one year can cause more gold to be produced than is now supplied by California and Australia together. Whatever solution may be arrived at, it is of the greatest importance that this vexed question be settled on a durable basis and without delay; not only because it may endanger existing friendly feelings, but may lead to heavy losses by parties believing in treaty stipulations, who expect their being carried out, and, in case of loss, may make claims against the United States. Should such claims be preferred against Japan, they might not so easily be recoverable as they would have been five or six years ago.

For more than three years back the Japanese have employed European officers in the organization of troops on the European plan. They have cannon foundries and five or six war steamers, and more than this, the most export
